State Financial Aid Programs

Every state has at least one Higher Education Agency, within a state government department, or as a separate committee, commission, or non-profit organization created by the state legislature, which oversees state financial aid programs for higher education. Generally, state programs are for the benefit of state residents, but occasionally, programs support out-of-state students in areas of workforce need, for specific majors or degrees.

These may include grants, scholarships, tuition waivers, work-study, or educational vouchers, which do not require repayment. Many of these programs are dependent on legislative funding and may be affected by budget shortfalls.

Some states also offer student and/or parent loans at reduced rates, loan forgiveness or reimbursement programs in exchange for service. States may also oversee federal programs within their borders, through the state department or agency. Click each state below for the agency for that state, to verify if new programs have been added.
